

Holdings and arrangement:

GCU's Research collections hold a great amount of material related to 1968 in terms of event, historical context and effects in later history. This document is only the first part of the research through the collections so additional material could be found in the rest of the collections.

The holdings under each archive/collection are arranged alphabetically. In the case of the Centre for Political Song they are divided in to material type as well.

Introduction:

GCU'S Research Collections are as deep as they are diverse. Amongst our existing resources are research materials on '1968' – major global events in and around 1968.

The year 1968 has been seen to be symbolic in many ways. This was largely so because some landmark events in major countries across the continents had either their starting points or the turning points in the year 1968.

As part of the University's module requirements towards Msc in Cultural Heritage Studies, three students have diligently put together these various resources for easier accessibility.

Historical overview:

The year 1968 would ever remain significant in world history. For whatever reasons, that was the year rebellions, revolution became the order of the day across the continents of the world.

This was the year America was confronted with various challenges politically and socially. The Vietnam War was one of them. The assassinations of Robert Kennedy and Martin Luther King also contributed to the overall tension in the United States of America. There were many historical signposts. There was Yippies, Black movements; Women's liberation protests etc.

From Cuba in Latin America came Fidel Castro's irresistible brand of revolution much to the discomfort of the United States of America. In Europe, the year 1968 was not any different. There was political tension in Czechoslovakia, students' demonstrations in France, Spain, UK, Germany, and Poland etc. Back in the Middle East, there were Palestinian guerrilla operations against Israel. Generally, tension was everywhere with strong feelings of anti-colonialism.

It was this same year that Mexico hosted The Olympics Games that was largely boycotted by 32 African nations in protest of South Africa's participation. Also in Nigeria, an oil rich country- the largest black nation in the world was engulfed in a civil war that almost destroyed the country.

Beyond this pervading tension in the air, 1968 was also the year Rock & Roll became more prominent with strong political messages in their musical expression. Coincidentally, that was the year technology in the television was further advanced with the introduction of live transmission turning the whole world to a "global village" by beaming events live as they were happening across the globe.

"There has never been a year like 1968, and it is unlikely that there will ever be one again" (K. Mark, 1968. THE YEAR THAT ROCKED THE WORLD, (Ballantine) 2003)
